Bad Blake is a minor country legend who finds himself performing in bowling alleys and other not even B-rate venues. He has been married too many times, been on the road for too many years, and has had one too many drinks too many times. His doctor tells Bad that his self-destructive ways will send him to an early grave. While performing in Sante Fe, Bad meets newspaper journalist Jean Craddock who wants to do a piece on him for her newspaper. Despite their age difference, Bad and Jean start a relationship. Jean and her four-year-old son become the closest thing to family that Bad's had in a long time. When a more famous former touring partner asks Bad to start writing songs for him, both Bad's professional and personal life seem promising. Will he be able to hold onto it or will his destructive lifestyle jeopardize everything?
